And Sarah s wages to be added; that makes - Miss Lavington walked to the window, and, drawing aside one of the muslin curtains, looked out into the street. Her mother was in the habit of paying her household bills once a fortnight; and on every alternate Monday morning the writing-table in the little drawing-room of No. 101, Ovington Street was littered with what she called the books - a greasy collection of thin volumes exhaling a doubtful smell.
